About This Game

It has been only a few weeks since they came. The aliens have taken a majority of the population centers out and are working on remote areas now. As far as you know everyone is already dead. All communications were blocked as soon as they arrived so there is no way to know if anyone else has survived this long. You were brought up in this part of the bayou and fortunately a previous battle against the aliens was already fought here leaving behind a plethora of weaponry.

Eventually they will get you. They seem almost endless in supply. Their spacecraft seem to be the source of their hive spawning. Taking them out might slow them down at least...

Blackwater Bayou is a VR game based in a swampy area of Southern Louisiana. Multiple weapon types and dual wielding is available to speed up progress and carnage.

It's not unplayable but it is hot garbage. Some of the assets are nice but everything else is atrocious. Movement is the hardest and most frustrating part of the game as it requires you to aim in a very specifc way that changes depending on terrain around you. You can't really lose the game as you pick up a infinite ammo, no-animation minigun with a million round per minute fire rate and everything you kill heals you. The same handful of enemies come at you ad nauseum while you struggle to traverse the terrain and blow up a few flying saucers to "win."

This is a travesty wearing the skin and potential of a much better game.
